Actually, we've had a Mario clone in the works since january, and in april (soon after the Dorkly video came out) we changed direction and implemented floor portals - the earliest saved working revision is dated 28.04.2011.

Regardless. We didn't steal your idea. The decision to actually change the mario clone into Mari0 came from Dorkly's video alone.

And i'm really serious, you cant use all mario stuff in your games

As i'm employee of Nintendo of America, i'm really asking you to stop development, and delete all info from your website

Right. Then what's your position in the company? And who's your supervisor?

Our supervisor is Robert Saunders from British part of company, and i'm some kind of his right hand.

And also i'm part-time programmer in Nintendo's side projects

You know, I happen to recall that Robert Saunders left the company in April.

And I also happen to know that at the moment of me writing this, you're writing your stupid email with a faked sender address.

How would you feel like if I decided to publish this little conversation of ours with your email left in? At the very least you'll only be laughed at for your abysmal googling skills.

Anyway, my google.code project is started earlier than yours, so just admit that you stole the idea.
Or explain it somehow, and you'll be free, or you will get some emails from Nintendo directly

That's all.
Best Regards.
